Every one of them did once, and the first of the new Rainbow was still a story, stored with every colour of the rainbow. Red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo, and violet — all shining at once.

Chapter 1: The Old Map

Tolu found the map in her grandmother's attic — an old, folded piece of paper with strange markings.

"Look at this, Sam!"

Sam peered over her shoulder. The map showed a path through the forest, past a waterfall, and up to the peak of Rainbow Hill.

At the top was a symbol: a circle with seven colours.

"And look," said Tolu, pointing at the bottom corner. There was a riddle written in faded ink:

"Seven colours light the hill when wisdom, courage, and friendship stand still."

"Wisdom, courage, and friendship," Sam repeated. "I wonder what that means."

"There is one way to find out," said Tolu. "Let us go."

Chapter 2: Into the Forest

The next morning, the two friends set out with backpacks full of water, snacks, and a torch.

The forest path was green and cool. Birds sang overhead, and sunlight filtered through the leaves.

After an hour of walking, they came to a fork in the path.

"Which way?" asked Sam.

Tolu studied the map. "Left goes to the waterfall. Right goes deeper into the forest."

"Let us try left first," said Sam. "The waterfall might have a clue."

They followed the path to the waterfall, a beautiful cascade of water falling over mossy rocks.

Behind the waterfall, carved into the rock, they found the first clue:

"Wisdom speaks through questions, not answers. Ask and you shall find."

Tolu and Sam looked at each other. "We need to ask the right question," said Tolu.

"Maybe the waterfall knows?" said Sam.

"How do we get to the top of Rainbow Hill?" Tolu asked aloud.

The waterfall seemed to change. A section of water thinned, revealing a hidden path behind it.

"There it is!" shouted Sam.

Chapter 3: The Stone Bridge

The hidden path led them to an old stone bridge over a deep ravine.

But the bridge was damaged — several stones were missing from the middle.

"How do we cross?" said Sam, peering down into the dark ravine.

Tolu found loose stones nearby. "We could try to rebuild it," she said.

They worked together, lifting heavy stones and placing them carefully. It took time and effort, but eventually, the bridge was solid enough to cross.

On the other side, carved into a stone wall, was the second clue:

"Courage is not the absence of fear. It is walking forward despite it."

Sam gulped. "I think we are getting closer."

Chapter 4: The Final Climb

The path to the top of Rainbow Hill was steep and rocky. Clouds gathered above them.

"Are you scared?" Tolu asked.

"A little," said Sam. "But I am more curious than scared."

"That is exactly what courage is," said Tolu.

They climbed together, helping each other over difficult spots. When Sam slipped, Tolu caught her hand. When Tolu was tired, Sam encouraged her to keep going.

At the peak, they found a stone circle — seven large stones arranged in a ring, each painted a different colour of the rainbow.

In the centre was a flat stone with a message:

"Stand together in the centre, and the hill will remember its light."

Chapter 5: The Rainbow

Tolu and Sam stepped into the centre of the stone circle, holding hands.

For a moment, nothing happened.

Then the sky above them began to change. The clouds parted, and rays of sunlight streamed down, hitting the seven coloured stones.

One by one, the stones began to glow. Red. Orange. Yellow. Green. Blue. Indigo. Violet.

The entire hilltop was bathed in rainbow light. It was more beautiful than either of them had imagined.

"We did it!" whispered Tolu.

"The riddle makes sense now," said Sam. "Wisdom led us through the questions. Courage carried us through the difficult climb. And friendship — us working together — brought us here."

They sat in the rainbow light for a long time, not saying anything, just feeling the magic of the moment.

When the light faded, they walked back down the mountain, hand in hand, with hearts full of wonder.

The mystery of Rainbow Hill was solved. But the best part was not the rainbow — it was the journey they shared.

What We Learned

- Logical thinking and following clues help solve mysteries.
- Courage means being scared but moving forward anyway.
- Friendship and cooperation make hard journeys easier.
- The best adventures are shared with people you trust.

Discussion Questions

1. How did Tolu and Sam use logical thinking to find the clues?
2. When have you been brave even though you were scared?
3. What adventure would you like to go on with your best friend?
